

Combating Corruption and Promoting Equity in the Health Sector

COURSE ABSTRACT

This professional and policy-oriented course tackles the complex issue of how corruption manifests in the multi-billion dollar health sector. The course is ideal for a wide range of professionals, researchers, and students currently involved or interested in examining the core topics related to corruption in the health sector, policymaking, and strategies to confront corruption. The course includes a masterclass, lectures, case studies, panel sessions, and a group change design workshop highlighting the different challenges and solutions to addressing corruption in health with leading global experts including those from the WHO, USAID, and the World Bank. The first day of the course will examine core topics related to corruption in the health sector, engage in discussion with panels of experts with direct field experience dealing with corruption, and explore solution building through a change design workshop. The second day consists of targeted issue areas allowing participants to concentrate on a health corruption track of interest.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

- Describe the key characteristics of corruption in the healthcare system and explain how it manifests in different contexts;
- Explore the various policy, business, legal, financial, and governance strategies and tactics to address health corruption from different expert perspectives;
- Formulate solutions to healthcare corruption based on principles of transparency, accountability and evidence-based policymaking.

Dates: July 10th & 11th 2019

Location: UC San Diego Campus, La Jolla, CA

For more information contact:

Robert Houghtaling
rhoughtaling@ucsd.edu
858.534.4041